BY I.A MARQUISE DE FONTENOY.

I MPEROR NICHOLAS has at length of Monaco. For the first time since Czar Alexander III. ascended the throne, in 1881—that is to say, more than thirty years ago—the ruler of the Rouge-et-Noir principality has been permitted to cross the Russian frontier, and to set foot on Muscovite territory.

True, Nicholas has not yet consented to receive him at St. Petersburg. But on the prince last month to visit Bialowitz and Warsaw. But St. Petersburg still remains terra incognita to the Prince of Monaco, and the Russian court is the only one in Europe which resolutely declines to permit him to cross its threshold, although it has even gone to the length of welcoming such a man as King Peter, who reached his throne through the shocking assassination of his predecessor, whose murderers still form part of his entourage. tourage.

Emperor William has signalized the celebration at Koenigsberg of the one hundredth anniversary of the commencement of the War of Liberation by bestowing his Order of the Black Eagle upon Prince von Dohna, the Order of the Black Eagle being the Prussian equivalent of the English Order of the Garter, of the Russian St. Andrew, of the Italian Order of the Annunciation, and of the Austrian and Spanish Orders of the Golden Fleece. Prince von Dohna, as president of the provincial Diet of East Prussia, took an active part in the ceremonies, and is one of the oldest and most intimate friends of the Kaiser, who advanced him to the rank of a Prussian prince some thirteen years ago. Until that time Richard von Dohna had been a burgrave, an ancient title superior to that of count, and which had been enjoyed by the family since it was bestowed upon the Dohna of his day by Emperor Frederick Barbarossa in 1153. Prince Richard makes his principal home at Schlobitten, a grand old place in Eastern Prussia, which, with its superb and immense park, shaded by glorious trees, has been in the uninterrupted possession of the family since the beginning of the fourteenth century.

The name of Dohna is recorded in terrupted possession of the family since the beginning of the fourteenth century.

The name of Dohna is recorded in all the most important pages of German, and more especially of Prussian, history. Statesmen, generals, and in particular, confidants and cronles of their successive sovereigns have borne the name, and there is no king who has reigned over Prussia, nor previous to that any elector who has ruled over Brandenburg, who has not stayed at the Castle of Schlobitten and occupied the antiquated four-poster bed in which the present Emperor sleeps whenever he pays a visit there.

sleeps whenever he pays a visit there.

President Poincare has revived the post of chief of the military household at Elysee, which had remained unoccupied under his two predecessors as chief magistrate, and has selected for the post General Beaudemoulin, one of the most brilliant and dashing cavalry generals of the French army, who has lately been commanding the cavalry brigade at Epernay.

After obtaining his commission, he first served with the Spahis, and with the Chasseurs. d'Afrique in the Algerian disturbances, in the Moorish border campaigns, and in Tunisia. In fact, he won rapid promotion by his brilliant feats of daring in desert warfare. Then for a long time he was one of the great school for cavalry officers at Saumur, and after that was colonel of the Sixteenth Dragoons, one of the crack cavalry corps of the narmy.

He is a very handsome man, of very distinguished manner and bearings with most simple, unaffected and pleas, and manners. President Poincare could not have made a better selection, and if I draw attention to it, it is because all those people from this side of the water who may happen to be received at the Elysee Palace during the next seven years will necessarily be brought into contact with him.
